

Lab 3 latency test

We started with nine nodes and removed three nodes at a time. We noticed that the time for the nodes to reach consistency declined approximately linearly as seen in the graph (note that the graph is displayed from three nodes to nine nodes). It is difficult to reach any definite conclusion with so few data points. However, there is a clear trend that with increased number of nodes leads to an increased amount of time until consistency is reached.